SULLIVAN SENTENCED.

The Boston Prize Fighter Given Twelve Months in Jail.

A Motion in Arrest of Judgment Made by His Counsel.

The Defense Claims an Error in the Jury Instructions.

All Objections Overruled and the Sentence Delivered.

A Twelve Months' sent

PERRYS, Miss., August 17.—Court did not open till nearly 9 o'clock this morning. Judge Terrel was on hand long before that time and Sullivan was also seated before the bar, showing up with Clune before his attorney came to court. He looked pleasant and unconcerned, although there was a tremble in his eye after the jury were seated, as he glanced over at the men who found him guilty. The crowd in the court was small, but grew larger in a few minutes. Hardly was the court seated when the grand jury filed in. They presented one indictment to be recorded and filed out again.

The Sullivan case was then taken up, and Judge Calhoun submitted a motion in arrest of judgment. The papers had been left at home, however, and the case went over temporarily. The district attorney then called the case of J. Fitzpatrick.

The district attorney read the indictment and then asked, "What say you, guilty or not guilty?" "Guilty" quickly replied Fitzpatrick. The district attorney then addressed the court reviewing Fitzpatrick's connection with the fight and the circumstances under which he became referee and closed by saying that he felt justified in recommending the accused to the court's clemency. Captain Fitzpatrick also made a statement in his own behalf and concluded by asking the court to be as lenient as possible.

The court reserved its decision in Fitzpatrick's case and the Sullivan matter was taken up again. Crews read the motion in arrest of judgment but the court overruled the motion. After the reading of the decision Green submitted a motion for a new trial and asked for an immediate decision without argument from himself. The motion was based on various technical points alleging error in instructions to the jury and in the admission and exclusion of testimony, etc. Judge Terrel then overruled the motion and sentenced Sullivan to one year's imprisonment.

On an appeal of the case to the supreme court Sullivan gave a bond for $1000 for his appearance and $500 costs. He left Purvis at 6:37 p. m., accompanied by his faithful friend Clune. There was a large crowd at the depot who bade him good bye. On the train Sullivan had but little to say, and behaved well, although a little jolly. When the train passed Richburg Charlie Rich was at the depot with a large concourse of people. Bonfires were lit and cheers given to the champion.

Fitzpatrick was sentenced to pay a fine of $200. Sullivan's attorneys were allowed sixty days to file a bill of exception.

Playing for a Wager

LEADVILLE, August 17.—The Leadville and Aspen clubs play a series of three games here, the best two in three for a wager of $300. Leadville gained the first victory to-day in a splendidly contested game. The batteries were Young and Adams for Aspen and Fitzgerald and Lothman for the home team.

HELENA, Mont., August 17.—The constitutional convention completed its labors this day and adjourned sine die.

LATER.—The constitutional convention completed its work to-night and adjourned sine die at 11 o'clock. The delegates were treated to a farewell banquet at the Sheridan house and many of them took the midnight train for their homes.

[illegible]

BALTIMORE, August 17.—Kilrain this morning simultaneously heard of Sullivan's sentence and of the arrival of a Maryland officer in Baltimore to take him to Purvis. He was surprised and scared. The law for the collection of forfeited bail in Maryland is defective and should Kilrain become alarmed at Sullivan's fate and skip his bonds-men would likely have to pay.

War Indications.

WAR DEPARTMENT,

Indications for twenty four hours commencing Sunday, August 18, at 7 a. m.:

For Colorado: Light to fair showers, cooler in northern, stationary temperature in southern portion, variable winds.

[illegible] at West Point

WASHINGTON, August 17.—Col. John M. Wilson, of the engineer corps, and late superintendent of the public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia, was to-day appointed superintendent of the United States military academy at West Point.

Receiver Refused

SAN ANTONIO, August 17.—The application for the appointment of a receiver for the San Antonio and Aransas Pass railway before Judge King was denied to-day on the defendants bill of exceptions, the court holding that there was nothing in the condition of the company to warrant any such proceedings.

Mrs. H[illegible]

NEW YORK, August 17.—Mrs. President Harrison arrived here this morning from Fall River, Mass., and then took the 9 o'clock train for Washington.

Texas Arriving

DENISON, August 17.—Running teams are pressed from Georgetown, Idaho Springs, Trinidad, Pueblo and Central City to attend the tournament.

A Royal Welcome

BERLIN, August 17.—The emperor and empress of Germany met a royal welcome on their arrival here, the people greeting the visitors with unbounded enthusiasm.

A Decree Issued

PARIS, August 17.—The minister of the interior has issued a decree which prohibits the hawking or placarding of documents emanating from Boulanger, Dillon or Rochefort.

Boulanger Heard From Again.

PARIS, August 17.—Boulanger has issued another manifesto. His latest effort is addressed to "honest people" and declares that it was the senate chamber that procured his conviction.

Prominent Capitalist [illegible]

PITTSBURG, August 17.—A cablegram from Paris announces the death of Wm. Shaw, vice president of the Pennsylvania company. He was reputed to be worth $20,000,000 and was a philanthropist.

Will Defend Nagle

SAN FRANCISCO, August 17.—Attorney Carey received a telegram to day from the department of justice at Washington instructing him to assume on behalf of the United States government the defense of United States Marshal Nagle, who shot Judge Terry on Wednesday morning.

A Fatal Family [illegible]

LOUISVILLE, Ky., August 17.—Adam Beutel, a farmer, last night shot his wife and then fatally wounded himself. They quarrelled while watching at the bedside of a son who was dying from wounds received at the hands of a negro two weeks ago. Mrs. Beutel is not dangerously hurt.

A Ring for Inf[illegible]

WASHINGTON, August 17.—Acting Indian Commissioner Bell has telegraphed the agents at Ouray and Uintah reservations in Utah, asking for information as to the report that the Ute Indians are off their reservations. The Indian office has not received any information other than that contained in newspaper reports.

Mrs. Terry's A[illegible]ation Ref[illegible]

SAN FRANCISCO, August 17.—In July the supreme court of California affirmed the decision of the superior court in the Sharon Hill Terry divorce case and remanded the case for a new trial. Mrs. Terry has applied for a rehearing before the supreme court to have the order for a new trial set aside. The supreme court to-day refused her application.

Calls C[illegible] A[illegible]

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., August 17.—Senator Call several weeks ago published a letter challenging the persons opposing his election to meet him in every county of the state and discuss the charges which have been made against him by the public press. The Times-Union will publish to morrow an acceptance of this challenge by W. D. Cripley of Pensacola, chairman of the democratic state committee.

A [illegible] Love

NEW YORK, August 17.—Sam Crane of the Metropolitan base ball club was arrested this evening on the charge of running away with Hattie Travenfelter, the pretty wife of a Scranton, Pa., fruit dealer. Hattie in russet shoes and base ball cap was also made a captive and locked up in the cell adjoining her lover. Travenfelter claims his wife took $1,500 belonging to him when she ran away. Mrs. Travenfelter claims that the money taken was her own and that she left her husband because of his cruelty and worthless ness.

W[illegible]

CITY OF MEXICO, August 17.—A reception was given in honor of Hon. John G. Carlisle by a joint permanent committee of the senate and chamber of deputies on Thursday night. At 8 o'clock Carlisle was met by the committee and escorted through the brilliantly illuminated chamber to President Diaz. Carlisle spoke for half an hour. He assured his hearers that there was no intention nor desire of the United States or its people to annex Mexico. But it was their earnest wish to develop trade with Mexico and to that end they wished that nation to develop wealth and power as rapidly as possible. The president of the permanent committee made a complimentary reply.

Stock Market.

NEW YORK, August 17.—The stock market was as dull this morning and barren of feature as on the preceding days of this week. There was, however, a generally firm to stagnant tone and most of the stocks traded in were moved by smaller fractions than last evening. The strong features of the day were C. C. C. and St. Louis and Grangers. The market closed dull and steady to firm at generally the best prices of the session.

OTTAWA, Ont., August 17.—The minister of marine to day received by mail as expected the official reports of the seizure of British sealers in the north Pacific by United States cruisers. These papers, it is understood, show that such seizures as far as they relate to ships registered in Canadian ports were made outside of the marine jurisdiction of the United States and were therefore unjustifiable and entitle the owners to a compensation for the loss suffered. The papers were laid before the council of ministers this afternoon. Copies will be forwarded to the imperial authorities.

[illegible] Butler [illegible]

LOWELL, Mass., August 17.—General Benjamin F. Butler was questioned by a reporter and denied that he had been retained as prosecuting attorney against Justice Field and Deputy Marshal Nagle. General Butler says he could not be retained in the case as he would not act as prosecuting officer against Judge Field. "I do not think the law of the case has been clearly stated in the newspapers," said the general. "If a man is attacked and in danger of his life he is obliged to go to the wall before he can take the life of his assailant. It is different in the case of an officer sent to protect a justice of the court. It is then left in his judgment to strike when he fears the life of the judge in danger from his assailant."

Rival Factions Fight

AUSTIN, Texas, August 17.—Yesterday evening Governor Ross received a dispatch from Richmond saying that a fight occurred there between the "Jay Birds" and "Woodpeckers," rival political factions in which Sheriff Garvey and Deputy Blackeny were killed and several others wounded. The dispatch said that the fighting was still in progress, and that troops were needed. A dispatch received from Captain Reichardt, of the Houston Light Guards, said that Richmond was in the hands of a mob, and several persons had been killed. Governor R[illegible] ordered the Light Guards of Houston to go to Richmond at once. He also telegraphed orders to the Bonham Grays to be ready to leave at a moment's notice. "Jay Birds" is the name given to the white democrats of Fort Bend, numbering about four hundred. The "Woodpeckers" include the negroes and a few whites. The negroes are vastly in the majority. It is a renewal of the race quarrel.

HOUSTON, Tex., August 17.—Two gentlemen who arrived here from Richmond on the 11:35 o'clock train reported the "Woodpecker" crowd in the court house surrounded by the other faction, but no more fighting had occurred. They confirmed the news of the killing of Sheriff Garvey and Deputy Blackeny. A young mulatto girl was killed by accident and the following wounded: Henry Frost, badly; Val Gibson, slightly; Judge Parker, badly; and Mason Bradley, seriously. The town is crazy with excitement. The riot was precipitated by a "Jay Bird" walking through the town with a Winchester. He was arrested and put in jail and the fight commenced soon after. The dead men were both "Jay Birds." All was reported quiet at mid night.

RICHMOND, Tex., August 17.—Since the fighting last evening in the streets here things have been quiet. The county [illegible] who are among the "Woodpeckers" assembled to the court house carrying their [illegible] and still occupy that place, supported by the Houston Light Guards, who landed this morning, [illegible] strong. The wounded in the court house are Judge J. W. Parker, an ex-member of the legislature, and Deputy Sheriff Mason, who was shot badly through the shoulder. One ball entered beneath the shoulder blade of Judge Parker and another through the groin. The latter is the most dangerous wound. The bodies of Sheriff James Garvey and ex-Sheriff W. Cravate still being held until the proper officers come here to hold an inquest.

The "Jay Birds" are in possession of the streets and no warrants have been sworn out or any arrests made. Henry Frost, leader of the "Jay Birds," also was shot down on the street last night with four bullets in him. He is fast sinking. He was waylaid some months ago and shot, but recovered though he still has a ball in him. The "Jay Birds" are confidently pre, red for trouble at any moment, while the Woodpecker party has been materially weakened by the loss of their leaders. There is a panic among the people here, chiefly among the negroes, and nearly one hundred have left by rail to-day never to return. It is said that Henry Frost, a "Jay Bird," after he was shot down raised himself on his arm and killed ex-Sheriff Blakeny with his winchester. Governor R[illegible] is expected to-night.

SAN FRANCISCO, August 17.—Deputy Marshal Nagle who shot and killed David S. Terry at Lathrope last Wednesday, was released from jail at Stockton by Sheriff Cunningham before day light this morning and brought to this city on a special train. This proceeding was based on a writ of habeas corpus issued by Judge Sawyer of the United States circuit court yesterday, directing Cunningham to produce Nagle in the circuit court at 11 o'clock this morning. Nagle was taken from the Stockton jail at an early hour in order to avoid the excitement which his removal during the day might have caused.

A great number of persons were present in the court room this morning when he appeared. Attorney McGuire introduced District Attorney White of San Joaquin county, and said that they appeared conjointly to ask the release of Nagle by the authorities. The attorney, after reading the papers connected with the proceedings, entered a general protest against the order of the court, claiming that it was beyond the jurisdiction of the federal courts to take from the custody of the state officials a person who had been arrested for the commission of a crime within the state's jurisdiction and against the state laws. "If the court please," said Attorney McGuire, "we desire to protest against any requisition of this court to the sheriff of San Joaquin county to bring a person held under the state authority into this court on a writ of habeas corpus. The prisoner has, however, been brought into court out of deference to the court by the sheriff, and the sheriff now presents his return of the writ."

The attorney then proceeded to read the written return and continued: "We shall take the position on behalf of the people of the state of California that Mr. Nagle is in the custody of the state authorities and the federal courts have no jurisdiction to take the prisoner from the custody of the state officials and the case gives rise to very important questions which we are not at present prepared to argue."

Judge Sawyer said: "It does present important questions. The claim on the part of the prisoner is that the acts complained of were committed in performance of his duty, under the laws of the United States and for that reason he has been brought within the jurisdiction of this court. We recognize the necessity of your being thoroughly prepared for the argument, and probably need time for obtaining facts. It perhaps might be well to postpone the matter for a week to give counsel the opportunity to decide what is the proper course to pursue."

After conferring the lawyers decided [illegible]

Harrison's Libel Case

NEW YORK, August 17.—The counsel in the suit of John Wanamaker against Russell B. Harrison, which was commenced in the Supreme court of the United States, filed a demurrer to the answer of Mrs. A. S. Harrison in which he makes a general denial of the libel charges. For a further separate and distinct defense and answer the defendant alleges that the Montana Live Stock Journal is a newspaper published and owned by the Journal Publishing company, and the defendant had no control or connection with the matter appearing in the columns of that paper.

The [illegible] Question.

OLYMPIA, August 17.—The convention spent the morning session in discussing the land bill. Several of the amendments proposed in committee of the whole were killed and it is now thought that the whole article may be defeated as there are so many conflicting interests it seems impossible to harmonize them. Only two small sections, one on a state seal and the other on the state boundaries remain to be passed to complete the constitution after the land question is settled.

A Plea of Not Guilty.

PITTSBURG, August 17.—The solicitor for the South Fork Fishing and Hunting club filed not guilty to-day to all the allegations made by Johnstown sufferers against the club through a bill in equity filed some weeks since. This has the effect of placing the case at issue on the docket and the case will now come on for jury trial in turn. The filing of this plea was done voluntarily and shows that the defendants are anxious to have the matter settled.

[illegible] Taxation.

BISMARCK, August 17.—All this afternoon was spent in [illegible] the section providing a system of railroad taxations. The advocates of the gross earning system which is favored by the railroads carried a motion to reconsider that section and after a bitter fight succeeded in so amending it that the legislature may provide for a gross earnings tax on all property used exclusively in the operation of the roads.

Water Matters.

Mr. David McShane came down from Beaver creek yesterday where he has a force of about thirty men engaged in constructing a ditch for the city. This is a very simple statement but it means that the city is about to be plunged into some heavy litigation. It has been known to certain parties for a long time that there were a couple of small streams having their source back of the Peak and acting as feeders to Beaver creek, the waters of which were unappropriated. Different city councils were urged by engineers to appropriate the water for the city, as it could easily be brought into Lake Moraine and eventually into Buxton, Bear and other creeks. This they refused to do, and a well known city officer, seeing that the prize would soon slip away, began taking steps to secure the rights. He worked quietly and patiently and so far as he knows has secured the rights good and firm. Some weeks ago a company was formed composed largely of men of wealth and standing in the state, which has the object of bringing the water to this city. The company has begun the construction of a ditch for the appropriation of the water. Two weeks ago the water committee of the city council visited the mountains and examined the creeks and has decided that it will take the water. Mr. F. E. Baxter has [illegible] several days in surveying the line of the ditch for carrying the water and Mr. McShane has been employed to construct it. The city's ditch has been taken out a short distance above that of the company. Mr. McShane reported both parties working side by side yesterday.

The company has plenty of money back of it and proposes to stick out for its rights until proved wrong. The members of the council will not discuss the matter but state that they feel the sentiment of the taxpayers of the city justifies them in securing a supply of water for all time to come cost what it may. The matter will come up at the council meeting to morrow night.

REAL ESTATE!

THE WARNER

Don't Go Three Miles Out in the Country for Lots, when you can get them for the Same Money in

PARRISH'S ADDITION!

Only 3 Blocks from Cascade Avenue!
Only 3 Blocks from The Anders Hotel!
Only 4½ Blocks from Post Office!

THE STREETS IN PARRISH'S ADDITION

Are 100 to 140 feet in width. THE ALLEYS are all 20 feet wide. There are no 60 or 80 feet streets, and narrow, 10-feet alleys, such as are found in other loudly advertised "Additions," with high sounding titles, where you pay high prices for lots, without duly considering that you are throwing away your money.

In the Alley Behind Every Lot in Parrish's Addition

There is a 3-inch Water Pipe, connected at Chestnut street with a 16-inch main; the Largest in the City's System. THE MAIN CITY DITCH, taking pure, clear water from the Fountain, runs just back of PARRISH'S ADDITION, and within a stone's throw of it.

YOU ARE SURE TO GET WATER

(Both from Pipes and Ditch) in PARRISH'S ADDITION if there is any water in the Fountain, even if other parts of the city are suffering from scarcity of the precious fluid.

REMEMBER THE FOREGOING, and then, when I tell you I will sell you a First-Class

LOT IN PARRISH'S ADDITION FOR $350

To $1,000 a full size lot 50 by 190 feet, do not hesitate a moment about buying. You can buy two lots on a corner, and erect pretty little cottages across them, giving each cottage a front, pretty little yard, and readily rent them, owing to the location, etc.

To Pay You 25 to 35 Per Cent Per Annum on the Entire Investment.

WHERE CAN YOU DO THIS ELSEWHERE?

THE STREET CAR LINE RUNS THROUGH PARRISH'S ADDITION, East to West, and will doubtless soon be extended to the North, past the "Mesa Road," up to THE ROCK ISLAND SHOPS. Lots are sold on Time to Suit Buyers, if possible.

I AM ALSO SELLING

LOTS IN CALVERT HEIGHTS!

On Easy Terms, and at from $300 to $400. They bear very much the same relation to

COLORADO CITY,

As do Parrish Addition Lots to Colorado Springs, and

I CAN RECOMMEND THEM AS AN INVESTMENT!

CALVERT HEIGHTS!

Is surrounded by growing and progressive enterprises. THE MIDLAND SHOPS lie at its Northeast corner. Colorado City proper is North and Northeast of it. Bott's Additions join it on the North and Northwest. Colorado Springs itself is in full view, only two miles to the Southeast, and last though not least important,

The Great Glass Manufacturing Works

Are located in the corporation just south of CALVERT HEIGHTS. I have arranged to have every lot supplied with PURE WATER IN PIPES.

THE LOCATION IS SUPERB!

THE SURROUNDING VIEWS ARE MAGNIFICENT!

Last year I recommended you to buy lots in Parrish's Addition, and they have paid a better Profit than any other lots on the Market. This year I urge you to add to YOUR INVESTMENT AS MANY LOTS IN CALVERT HEIGHTS as you can afford to buy, with the result that before the year is out, you will again be glad that you have taken my advice.

CALL EARLY! BUY SOON!

There are not very many lots altogether and those who apply early will be all gone, and will have to Pay an Advance.

The New York Tribune believes that the man who carries his umbrella under his arm ought to be shot on sight. If this rule was applied to those who carry other people's umbrellas under their arms the mortality would be greater.

It is authoritatively stated that ex-Senator Riddleberger will offer his services to the Virginia democratic committee as a speaker during the coming campaign. Old Dominion republicans are to be congratulated now, everything seems to be going their way.

Full of years and honors Judge Watts, President Grant's commissioner of agriculture and one of the ablest jurists in Pennsylvania, died yesterday at his home in Carlisle in that state. Judge Watts was the intimate friend of many of the great men of a generation ago and was at one time prominent in political circles, but since his retirement from public life, by reason of his age, some years since he has been but little heard of.

John L. Sullivan, in the sentence just imposed upon him by a Mississippi court has received his deserts. It was feared that the judge would allow him to escape with a fine, and as John is engaged in a business which brings him in large profits he naturally has a healthy contempt for such punishment. But the judge has done no such thing. He has given the Boston ruffian a twelve months' sentence and Sullivan's fat purse cannot save him. It is just such an example as all law-abiding citizens should be. Now let Kilrain be taken back to Mississippi and given a similar sentence and a long step will be taken in the direction of breaking up this prize fighting business.

The city of Atlanta has gone wild over the appointment of a negro to a position in the post office. The people are indignant first because the appointee is black and second because he is ignorant. The first charge is not a very serious one. There are other things worse than having a black skin. The second charge will hardly stand in the face of the statement made by the Atlanta Constitution, that the man is a university graduate. The negro passed the necessary examination under the civil service law and received a mark which entitled him to the first vacancy in the post office and consequently was appointed when that vacancy occurred.

Senator Voorhees of Indiana seems to have anarchistic inclinations. The other day he gave red whiskers in Bloomfield, Indiana, a crowd of devoted admirers and let himself loose in good old democratic style. He never supposed that what he said on that occasion would be reported to the outside world beyond the waving cornstalks and golden wheat fields which surrounded the town of Bloomfield, but unfortunately for the distinguished speaker a reporter was present. Among other startling things he said was: "If I had my way with men like the Carnegies that prey upon the land and suck, plump and fat like leeches, I would hang them." This is blood thirsty enough to have come from the lips of a Parsons or a Fielden. It is incendiary enough to place him in a Parsons. But it is not just the kind of language one expects to hear from a United States senator.

The death of Congressman James Laird, of Nebraska, is a serious loss to the country at large and especially to the western portion of it. Mr. Laird was born at Fowlerville, Livingston county, New York, on June 20, 1849. His family moved to Michigan when he was very young and he spent the early part of his life in that state. He was educated at Adrian college and Michigan university, graduating from the law department of the latter institution in 1871 and has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession. Removing to Nebraska soon after his graduation by his extraordinary ability he became prominent in the legal profession of that state. He was a member of the constitutional convention in 1875 and was elected to the Forty eighth congress. Mr Laird was re-elected to the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth congresses and was a member elect of the Fifty first at the time of his death. The far west has lost an able and always ready advocate and the republican party one of its strong adherents in congress.

Theodore Child has written for the September number of Harpers' Magazine an article upon "American Artists at the Paris Exhibition," illustrated with twenty engravings, nearly all full page, from paintings by Whistler, Dewing, Sargent, Harrison, Hitchcock, Melchers, Gay, Knight, Stewart, Pearce, Weeks, Reinhart, Mosler, Millet, Beckwith and Thayer. Mr Child does not hesitate to say that the American fine art section at the universal exhibition was "one of the strongest and most interesting of all the foreign department exhibits." He continues: "To justify this affirmation by comparison would be useless. There is no common measure applicable to works of art. The important fact to be noted is that in 1889 America boasts an elite of artists whose names are cited in company with the most illustrious, and that men like Whistler, E. A. Abbey, W. T. Dannat, and John S. Sargent can hold their own brilliantly in a place of art where the exhibitions, besides the French, are masters of the [illegible] of Munkacsy, Adolf Menzel, Herkomer, Richardson, Madrazo, Boldini, and Alfred Stevens."

Loretto Academy.

Classes will be resumed at the Loretto academy the 4th of September. After a year's experience, the sisters find it necessary to raise the terms for tuition. They have conducted teaching at all known for very reasonable prices, and are now decided they cannot continue at the same. They hope their former patrons will still consider the terms very modest. Therefore, according to the grade the following are the terms per quarter of ten weeks, payable in advance: Primary $8.00; Intermediate, $12.00; advanced $16.00. Music on harp, piano and guitar as well as painting, needlework &c forms extra charges.

NOTE OF THANKS FROM THE SISTERS.

Just one week ago to day we were forced to appeal to the city authorities for protection, and to day, with hearts overflowing with love and gratitude we acknowledge the prompt and vigilant response, as also the substantial kindness and sympathy of many generous citizens and visitors. They do not wish to have their good deeds published, but as we are commanded "to honor to whom honor is due," we take the liberty and pleasure of naming our kind benefactors. Many presented their donations in person to us, others sent through friends, and the others responded generously to the solicitations of our greatest friend, Mr J. T. Kelly. This gentleman was not only the first to present his donation and sympathy, but has given his time to procure funds from his acquaintances to have glass put in our windows, as well as protecting us from his own sparing use six pieces of furniture, which with the broken windows, presented quite an unprepossessing appearance to his kind eyes. The academy looks natural again, the windows have been repaired and paid for, and we, with means over and above to provide accommodations for the three sisters who are to inaugurate the last quarter of the school. We thank our friends and feel encouraged by their kindness, for which we shall daily beg our Father in Heaven to bless and prosper them. Messrs. J. T. Kelly, A. R. Ballou, L. R. Ehrich, J. J. Hagerman, F. E. Robinson, Wm. H. Sanford, L. Glockner, Mitchell Phelps, H. B. Stevens, J. F. Humphrey, John DeWitt Peltz, J. A. Hayes, jr., McGovney & Barton, J. [illegible], E. W. [illegible], C. H. White, A. L. Lawton, G. C. Hamilton, W. N. Pacen, J. L. Hopkins, Mr. Clifford, Mrs. Jongson, Mrs Barton, Miss M. Duffy, Miss Nora Nash, Miss Nellie O'Brien, Miss Mary Dillon, St Mary's Academy, Denver, Miss Rose [illegible], P. A. McCurdy, St Mary's Acad[illegible], Alabama.

Sincerely and gratefully,
SISTERS OF LORETTO.

A prominent visitor in this city yesterday was Mr. S. M. Stockslager, late commissioner of the general land office. He remained in the city for a few hours only but was kept busy for a drive through the streets. Mr Stockslager expressed himself as greatly surprised to find Colorado Springs the beautiful city that it is, as he had formed an idea that it was merely a little western prairie town. He proposes to send his family here to spend the summer next year. After a few days at Manitou Mr. Stockslager will go for a trip over the mountains as he is on a tour of inspection of the great west with whose interests he has lately been so greatly identified. Mr. Stockslager, it will be remembered, succeeded Commissioner Sparks, and since the retirement of the Cleveland administration has been practicing law in Washington. Mr. Stockslager for two terms represented the Third Indiana district in congress and is one of the leading lights of his party.

The Value (?) of Railways.

Few persons have any conception of the magnitude of the interests centered by the above title and very few even among the railway fraternity are aware of how fully this vast system occupies the field in which it is located, but if you will take a map and trace out, first, the New York Central & Hudson River; second the Boston & Albany, third the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern; fourth, the Michigan Central; fifth, the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St Louis (formerly the "Bee Line" and "Big Four") railroads you will be impressed with the wonderful foresight of the men who designed and executed the plan to operate under a uniform policy, and practically a common control, a system of railways that should furnish unsurpassed transportation facilities to the great commercial empire outlined above, and a trip over this grand organization will convince the most skeptical that the Vanderbilt system of railways, of which the New York Central & Hudson River railroad is the main stem, traverses the very heart of the business portion of this continent, touching either directly or through its immediate connections all the important commercial centers of the country and offering to health, pleasure and business travel facilities that are not equalled by any similar institution in the world.

An edition of one hundred thousand copies of a very neat little pamphlet bearing the title at the head of this article has just been issued by the American Bank Note company of New York which contains much interesting information concerning this great system.

W. Findley Thompson, of Palmer Lake, filed with the county clerk a statement of the financial standing of the Colorado Hotel and Sanitarium company of El Paso county. The statement shows a capital of $100,000 of which $18,600 worth of stock has been sold. The indebtedness is $14,517.10 and the assets are $28,500 invested in buildings and $14,895 in lands.

White House Affairs.

Washington Star (Ind.)

Some of the New York papers publish a story telegraphed from this city to the effect that Marquis de Chambrun is about to bring suit against President Harrison, in behalf of Mme Pelouard, late French cook at the White house, for wages during the summer season after her dismissal, claiming that when she was employed by Mr Harrison it was under contract by the year. As is the custom at the White house, the French cook's services were dispensed with when the president and his family went away for the summer.

It may be that the cook has some notion of bringing suit for wages, and has imparted the fact for publication to some of her associates. There is no authority for the story from any other source that could be learned of Marquis de Chambrun is out of the city, and has been for some time, but his son who represents the firm, said to a Star reporter to day that he had heard nothing of such a suit, and that he could say positively that his father had nothing to do with it.

It has always been the custom at the White house to employ the French cook for the season, as it is in other big establishments and in the summer their services have been dispensed with. Grant employed a French cook only on certain occasions. Hayes, Arthur and Cleveland had French cooks to whom they paid $100 per month. They were always discharged at the beginning of the summer season.

The president has to pay the wages of his cook out of his own pocket and it is customary to pay him only when wanted.

Rossini, who had always "a cool pour rire," used to say: "In olden time they used to compose music for the brain and for the ears; but it seems to me that now adays people are quite content when the thing looks well." Even Liszt confident was often his guiding opinion. For instance, when Meyerbeer gave "The Huguenots," his lawyer and confidant, Monsieur Crémieux, gave a luncheon, where he invited some influential friends to meet Meyerbeer. Round one of the guests, sat nothing.

Mme. Cornélius, with the lynx eye of any hostess who has people round her table invited for a meal, suddenly bounced upon her abstemious guest with that question which every lady imagines must go straight to the heart of her guests: "I am sure M. Rossini you don't like that dish; one can not easily please such a connoisseur as you are." "Pardon, madame, that is not at all the reason, but I never eat between my breakfast and my dinner. Of course you ask me why. Then did I come to a luncheon party? I will tell you. The other day I was invited to hear a performance of my 'William Tell' overture. At the moment where the allegro begins I saw two men in the band putting their trumpets up, but I could not for the life of me hear one note, so I asked the manager why they did not play. 'Oh, that is very simple,' he said, 'I could not get two trumpeters, but I thought I'd get some men to hold up the trumpet. It always looks well to see trumpets in an orchestra; but of course, as they can't play, you can't hear them.' Now, I can't eat any more than they could play; but as Meyerbeer, who is so superstitious would have taken it for a bad omen if I had sent an excuse, I thought I would just sit behind my plate because it looks well to have old friends round one's table."

A Church Committee Come to Grief.

In conversation the other day an old resident related this anecdote, which occurred some forty years ago: "On Stony creek there lived a number of old time gent[illegible] with their antiquated notions of life, with the exception of old Hughes on the east side and the corner stone of their far famed hospitality and the mainstay of the domestic economy. Notwithstanding the universality of whisky drinking the churches, as a rule, were more right in disciplining their members for drunkenness than they are now. Among those whose membership was at Stony creek was Judge L., and in an evil moment he took "too much," and was soon drunk. The next conference promptly appointed a committee to visit the brother, which committee consisted of Judge P. and Judge W. At the appointed day the committee went over to visit their brother, who gave them a hearty welcome and all took a good social drink, which was so often repeated during their stay that they forgot the object of their visit. The next conference called for a report on the case, when one of the gentlemen arose and said that they had visited with the brother and were satisfied Judge L., who was present at this time, was not and he was dealt with the same as if he had been got drunk again. There was nothing left to do but to drop the case. Hartford Cor. Sun.

Look at that beautiful young creature with a bloom on her cheek and a smile on her face, remarked Brown as several of them were flirting with a young lady at a ball. "Yes, there are many things with which to take a man for a husband," [illegible]

Trout that Remember.

Some time before the death of Seth Green the celebrated New York fish culturist and naturalist, he and a party of men went to a Philadelphia Press man and paid a visit with him to the fish hatcheries of that state at Caledonia. In one of the ponds there at that time were some large brook trout, many of which had been captured with the fly and on further examination of the pond it was found that the Adirondack region. There [illegible] Mr Green said had convinced him that trout have reasoning power and memory. When they were hooked and released slowly in by the careful fishermen they were capturing them for the sixth time and they had time and opportunity to note the form and character of the tackle that made them prisoners. According to Mr. Green they never forgot their experience. The trout had been in the pond a long time, the females never being allowed to spawn there, and would follow Mr Green as he walked along the edge of the water tossing bits of liver into it. To show that his theory about their memory and reason was correct he would carry a cane and fish rod concealed behind his back. If he took the cane from its concealment and held it out over the water the fish paid no attention to it, but the moment he produced the rod with its reel and a fine attached away the trout scampered like a flash to distant parts of the pond. Mr Green told me that he would permit any one to cast a fly in that pond to his heart's content, as he was satisfied that not one of the trout would come near it, so vividly did they remember their enemy of five years ago.

A Temperature of Water.

Dr. William A. H[illegible] has [illegible] with the following remarks: "Water for drinking purposes should never be at a temperature below 50 degs. We can always get it even in the hot weather as cool as this by letting it run for a minute or two from any [illegible] well. If not, drawing it from any country well. If not, there is no objection to cooling it to the point [illegible]. The Fort Leavenworth [illegible] which can now be had almost anywhere in the country, and by means of which the contained water is cooled by its own evaporation, is well the purpose admirably. I am quite sure that, if ice water should be generally recognized as a drink the average duration of life would be lengthened and great once considered more tolerable."

A Hand Some Structure.

HOUSTON, Tex., Aug. 13.—The new government building at this place is a radical type of Moorish architecture. It is so strongly oriental that its design has been not altogether criticised on the score that it is not appropriate for a public building in America. Owing to the great expense it will be [illegible] the superstructure which will decide to omit the [illegible] from the roof of the octagonal tower. The structure is of brick, three stories and a basement, with base walls of stone. The [illegible] of Texas cotton and the walls throughout laid with alternating bands of dark and red brick. The facade is broken in the [illegible] by a projecting pavilion, with three massive circular arched doorways and windows. The building which is now in process of construction and completed up to the top of the first story is [illegible] square of 75 by 150 feet, and will be used for the [illegible] other government offices. [illegible] building will cost about $70,000.

Dr. O. K. Chamberlin,
Principal of the Kansas City Medical and Surgical Institute, will be at Colorado Springs for a limited period, to the city of Colorado Springs, and invites those in need of health, to call at his office, No. 3, second floor, Park Row, and learn what he can do for them. Thirty years a specialist in New York City in the treatment of disease and application of the Electro-Medical Science has enabled him to produce results unknown in the healing art. His treatment is based on science and as reliable in its results as a watch. A current of electricity determines, absolutely the nature and location of the disease, thus obviating guesswork. Through the application of the discovery he has made in the laws of polarization, Dr. Chamberlin has cured and further guarantees himself to cure numerous diseases that have resisted the skill of medical and remedial agencies. Treatment is alike safe, speedy and reliable. In acute chronic and [illegible] cases call and investigate. Consultation free. [illegible]

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

SOME COLOSSAL FACTS AND FANCIES ABOUT HAY FEVER

A Disease Whose Symptoms Differ with Each Sufferer—A Variety of Remedies to Choose From—and Be Cured Perhaps

NEW YORK, Aug 18.—There are many persons who have hay fever, and with that strange perversity of constitution which [illegible] Nature, multitudes of these people [illegible] every summer when that [illegible] and try each [illegible] the fellow sufferers that he was [illegible] than all other [illegible] Nobody does, for him to think [illegible] he is not the only one. [illegible] hay fever, and [illegible] Daniel Webster and Henry Ward Beecher had hay fever, and James G. Blaine [illegible] Obviously there is something in common between the three and Blaine's death proved of the fact. He might also be proved of the fact that all things are to the lover of shaving, but that does not seem to follow all nights the rest of the community have slowly recognized the logic of the matter and no longer revere Mr Jones because he [illegible] in August

I know that many New Yorkers are about to go to Bethlehem, Pa., to the annual hay fever convention, I bought out one of them in a moment of weak distraction and a fog publication of the Word, and tried to learn something about the complaint. He was not built to talk. No hay fever patient is when the conversation turns on hay fever. They say flannery thing to kill forth about the disorder. At all events, Mr P — spoke directly I asked him — the hay fever was

"In the first place," he said, "it is not the hay fever. This was sufficiently a foolish name, but how it ever got to mean things worse. Hay fever is accompanied by sneezing, it sometimes, and sodden a cross cold. Both the [illegible] come in June. What we really mean when we say hay fever is a form of nervous catarrh which is peculiar to August. Once it begins about it is fully marvelous. If I were cast away on a desert island without a watch, I would know when Aug 20 came around, for that is my day for beginning. Some have it as early as Aug. 12, and I know one man who is free until Aug 26, but whatever a man's day may be, he makes no mistake of date on that day It is as regular as rent day

"I don't know what causes it. Nobody does anybody else, though theories are numerous enough. Influenza, health, fungous growths and other things are blamed for it, but nobody knows after the second or third year he has had the disease. The first year or two he generally knows all about it. What he does know [illegible] after he has his knowledge well buttoned up and put away, he never loses it—is that on a certain day of the year he wakes up with [illegible] all over him. The entire surface of his body is plastered several inches thick with a chill. Then he begins to sneeze. He'd a-begun to do this he finds that he has to vote Democratic there and all his energies to sneeze. There may be other things that he enjoys doing or which he feels obliged to do for local reasons, but he can't do 'em if they interfere with sneezing. That becomes, perforce, the paramount occupation of his life. He can't even curse his luck—[illegible] in the best intervals he has.

"If he goes into the sunlight his eyes get inflamed. His nose gets inflamed, anyhow, and when the inflammation [illegible] down and [illegible] through the throat to the lungs opening nothing within reach as it goes, till it winds up with an [illegible] that takes right hold of him, and makes him sit up nights till he [illegible] to the opium or the other habit.

"What do you do for it?"

"Oh, you try any number of things, and some of them are of the slightest [illegible] You buy all sorts of [illegible] that don't help you a particle, and you [illegible] also [illegible] for you, [illegible] all the [illegible] that nothing on earth will afford you any [illegible] relief unless you go away. For the [illegible] mysterious thing about the complaint is that it is perfectly easy to go away and leave it behind if you know [illegible] to go. If you don't go away you will have it up the first [illegible] and then will [illegible] by cars you, as [illegible] you were attached. Then you don't have it any [illegible] till your regular day next [illegible]. If you don't get away, all you can do is to avoid aggravating the symptoms, and quit your [illegible] it. Some people [illegible] a good [illegible] but I [illegible] that [illegible]

"But where do you get away from it?"

"There are a great many places [illegible] you can be free from it, or, at [illegible] tably free. Wherever you go you will [illegible] by have certain symptoms that are likely to last till mid-winter if you [illegible] of the nature. The symptoms are, however, only slight, and the [illegible] even to an annoyance. There have been a few cases in which the hay fever has [illegible], but it is not believed that the hay fever [illegible] ble. What you have to do if you want to run away is to cross the [illegible] go to Canada, go somewhere south of Cape [illegible] or up north, or to some [illegible] where you will be twenty-two or twenty-three hundred feet above the level of the sea. I believe in going to get rid of it by staying at Fire Island or at some other place on the coast where the sea air was very strong.

"There are all sorts of curious things about hay fever. It is very true that if you are sick of some other disease when this one is due, you won't have the one. Healthy people are most liable to it than sickly ones. If a young person gets it he is likely to outgrow it in mid-life age, but if he gets it late in life it will [illegible] worse year by year as he grows old. It is not hereditary. My father got it fifteen years after I did. And I don't suppose there is anything at all in the old idea that intellectual people were more disposed to have it than others. That theory long ago disappeared. Put then all the other diseases I have had disappeared also after they had [illegible] long enough to be discovered."

All this, however, is only one man's experience and views. I have [illegible] quite of many others, and the [illegible] is amusing.

The [illegible] of hay fever is so varied and contradictory as to be almost [illegible] Dr Henry [illegible] the editor of The American Analyst, [illegible] a list of the [illegible] by physicians [illegible] journals and text books. It numbered [illegible] and subjects comprising such [illegible] of strong bodies as salt and vitriol, borax and carbolic acid, burning sulphur [illegible] water and corrosive sub[illegible] and [illegible] oil. A slight [illegible] showed that under this seem[illegible] were some very definite prin[illegible] according to the condi[illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible]

Stringent, a relative, a [illegible] or an antiseptic were of the [illegible] value.

For there [illegible] to be a [illegible] to hay fever which age cannot wither nor custom [illegible] While the general symptoms are [illegible] fully alike in all [illegible] to develop quite or more symptoms for very [illegible] Some suffers [illegible] ple, is most affected in the eyes, which are so red, watery and weak as to prevent all visual [illegible] reading an impossibility. A second has to [illegible] each sneeze from influenza, a third from catarrh, a fifth from [illegible], and a sixth from a bad cold and [illegible] In several instances the Eustachian tubes and even the [illegible] are affected, resulting in partial deafness [illegible] Nausea is a [illegible] appetite, indigestion and other gastric troubles have also been reported by good authorities.

Notwithstanding the [illegible] which prevails as to the nature [illegible] of hay fever much valuable information has been collected in the past five years by physicians and scientists. At the [illegible] ing out of the county [illegible] Dr [illegible] found to contain a number of fungi very [illegible] to the fungi found by Wesley and Tyndall in [illegible] and the [illegible] of note [illegible] and bacteria. They [illegible] with [illegible] rapidly and [illegible] the field of the microscope [illegible] the worst stage. At [illegible] they are [illegible] in the saliva [illegible] of the mouth. They [illegible] in the air [illegible] in water [illegible] in the [illegible] of the [illegible] Dr. Phelps [illegible] the [illegible] and it would [illegible] to inform [illegible] there are two distinct kinds of hay fever [illegible] fever. The difference [illegible] whether one or two in [illegible] the same way and under [illegible] present in Chicago

As [illegible] of life are [illegible] the strongest [illegible] make [illegible] and female [illegible] amphoras [illegible] and iron [illegible] and [illegible] in this [illegible] hay fever [illegible] to [illegible] all the [illegible] hay fever [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] hay fever [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] results.

Where, as is not at always the case, there is [illegible] of the interior [illegible] the more [illegible] treatment [illegible] to combine with the germicide [illegible] such as morphine or cocaine. [illegible] such instances been almost [illegible] cases have been rare. [illegible] observers will have intimated [illegible] the most sanguine statement has [illegible] of the atlantic have been restored to health through the use of [illegible] the most favorable method the [illegible] per cent, while the average is about [illegible] in all probability be as [illegible] to the truth.

It is an instructive [illegible] upon the [illegible] of the physicians art. A [illegible] which involves no vital [illegible] function and which never results in [illegible] taught the medical faculty and [illegible] mysterious and baffling as [illegible] cancer and hydrophobia. Nor is this [illegible] the facts too strong. Of the [illegible] of great physicians [illegible] hay fever [illegible] of the inability of the medical [illegible] with the evil. "Go to the mountains, sail out on the [illegible] travel in high latitudes, or else stay home—and after till the disease has run its course," is almost the only advice that can be obtained from the medical [illegible]

Yet there is a bright light upon the horizon. Electrical [illegible] has revolutionized medical [illegible] as well as the other great fields of human life in the past decade, now promises to enter the lists against hay fever. As the [illegible] is to be the result of some weak [illegible] or medical action of the nerves, both [illegible] generated by the attacks of [illegible] which come into active life in the [illegible] the electrotherapeutic [illegible] to [illegible] the former with [illegible] and the latter with the [illegible] day [illegible]

Dr. A. W. Jackson, a [illegible] electrician, says [illegible] that the cure of hay fever in the present application of the [illegible] for. The alternate cases of the [illegible] hay fever in which [illegible] action, local and [illegible] which [illegible] offers the best if not the only [illegible] The [illegible] to be [illegible] as [illegible] lasting and strengthening [illegible] which [illegible] continue [illegible] and in [illegible] applications of the [illegible] and [illegible] alternating. With this [illegible] be employed [illegible] which will destroy the [illegible] that [illegible] to the [illegible] of the [illegible] electricians go so far as to [illegible] that the cure will discover [illegible] of the [illegible] but this is, I think a matter of conjecture rather than an established fact. The [illegible] is greater than that [illegible] any of known systems, and [illegible] from 20 per [illegible] That it will go higher with [illegible] is evident to any one who knows the progress of electro-therapeutics in the past ten [illegible]

In the [illegible] and [illegible] Jackson and his fellow electricians perfect their new system, the only thing to be said to sick [illegible] ers from the [illegible] is, "Go to the White [illegible] or else to the Paris [illegible] to poor [illegible]

SUPPLEMENT.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., SUNDAY, AUGUST 18, 1889.

IN A FRENCH CONVENT.

[Copyrighted 1889, by The Press Syndicate.]

BOULOGNE SUR MER, August 1, 1889.

The Convent de la Retraite where I am writing my new book is one of the oldest and most interesting in France, counting its age by centuries. Henry VIII once slept there and in 1801 it was the residence of Marshal Ney while commanding the camp of Boulogne. It was originally built as a palace for the archbishop and contains the authentic portraits of the twelve bishops who occupied the See of Boulogne from 1569 to 1789. Later it became a monastery, then a Jesuit college, and finally passed into the hands of the ladies who founded the order of the Retraite du Saere Coeur.

These ladies do not teach, but they do much good among the working girls of the city and are never idle in their beautiful home. They have a number of ladies as permanent boarders, and in times of retreat the convent is full. It is the favorite resort of the devout Catholics of the English and French nobility. The boarders find their material routine much like that of an hotel, except that one is served by black robed, handsome sisters, and that the bell which summons to meals has a very cloistral sound.

The archbishop who built this convent had an eye to both splendor and the picturesque. The main building is nearly four hundred feet long and from right and left wings extend, making a number of courts in which are most beautiful gardens. My own room overlooks the largest of these gardens, a wilderness of green, with thick clumps of trees and a lake with gold fish beneath the water lilies. On two sides are the cold, grey walls of the convent, above another side towers the ramparts, and at the end is the great sanctuary of the cathedral with the dome above. The trees and vines cling to the ramparts, showing vividly against the hewn grey stone, and here and there are niches with statues of the virgins and saints. At the end of the garden, just under the massive walls of the cathedral, is a statue of St. Michael and the Devil, almost hidden by the luxuriant and rapidly growing foliage.

My window is shaded by the magnificent trees on the ramparts, and the place is so quiet that one can hardly realize that the town hums beyond. Just behind this wing is the cloister and garden de communauté of the nuns, a sacred precinct, where common mortals are not admitted. Otherwise the boarders have perfect liberty and can go and come as they please, provided they are at home at half-past nine at night. They have an immense salon in which to receive their visitors and a very handsome one at that. It is in the main building, arched and heavily hung with curtains, and overlooks three of the gardens. The floor is waxed and very dark, and the table and chairs are carved antique oak. Out of it opens the various wings, and to the east extends a long hall leading to the chapel. The wide stone stone stairs lead to its door and in the marble paved vestibule below are always palms and shrubs.

When the boarders get tired of the gardens they can go up on the ramparts and have a superb view of the city sleeping on its hills and on clear days, of England across the channel. The ramparts encompass all of the old town or the Haute-Ville as it is called, and in which live the aristocracy of Boulogne whose forefathers lived there when the sea washed the ramparts and the Haute-Ville was not. Leading off from the ramparts by a draw-bridge, overhanging a watch-house, not far from the convent, is an old grey castle with massive towers and narrow barred windows high up in the steep, rough walls. It is the Chateau de Boulogne now the fortress and residence of the governors and in one of these great round Norman towers Napoleon III was imprisoned after his fatal descent upon Boulogne in 1840. His room overlooked the court, not the broad avenue of the ramparts, and he must have had a pretty dreary time of it. Out of the walls occasionally spring bunches of [illegible] but otherwise they are as stern and bare as a cliff that overhangs the sea.

Quiet and peaceful and away from the world as convent life is, it has its distractions. I got up at half past seven a week or two since to witness the first communion of the little boys of the college. The chapelle is large and hard some room, with the carved stalls of the nuns at the back, many chairs and prie dieu. In front and a rich and beautiful altar smothered in wonderful flowers made by the Reverende Mere, so perfect that I never questioned their truth. In the centre of the altar was a dais [illegible] surmounting a crown and beneath was a mass of gilt roses. Thirty or forty wax candles burned on either side and when the priest stood against this background clad in his heavy gold embroidered red and yellow robes he made a picture which many a subject hunting painter would have hailed with joy. Red draperies were everywhere.

In a little room behind the stalls a choir of boys sang and after the parents and friends were seated, a door near the chapel opened and a procession of altar boys appeared and two by two passed down the aisle and out into the hall to meet the communicants. They looked like little birds in their long red silk gowns, with their white veils crossed over their breasts. Little girls who had been kneeling at [illegible] with their hands crossed over their breasts. Little girls who had been kneeling at [illegible] with their hands crossed over their breasts. The choir sang, the sound of sweeping skirts and the little communicants appeared, coming back two by two, with their hands on their breasts. They marched between the stalls and took their seats in the long red pews, which had been placed in the upper part of the chapel, and each kneeling beneath a silk sash of white and shapely hats. They were followed by the altar boys who went to their seats and each taking one of the great white candles ranged in the aisles of the chapel went to the altar. This performance was repeated several times with variations and there were two impressive sermons. It all lasted about an hour and a half and then the boys went out and had a breakfast downstairs and a half hour in the gardens.

On Sunday morning last I witnessed a ceremony very interesting to an American. A big platform had been built in the front garden with two wide flights of steps leading up to it. On the stairs were heavy carpets and thick rows of ferns where banisters usually are. The platform was covered by a red carpet, and at the back was an altar with the ermine lined mantle surmounted by the crown and the candles and golden flowers. Behind this was a high painted screen much like the scene of a theatre, representing the towers and turrets of ancient Boulogne. At the end of a street a perspective was a glimpse of the sea with a boat containing the angels who, the legend hath it, brought the statue of Notre Dame de Boulogne to the favored city when the centuries were young. Against the grey decorative towers were trees and shrubs and ivy to their reality. The convent ivy grown ruins around three sides of the garden, the wall closing in the fourth. In each window were flowers and plants, the building was vivid with scarlet draperies, and a hundred flags waived in the court. All this was in honor of the bishop, who make his rounds every two years. This richly arranged platform is called a reposoir.

At about 10 o'clock the procession made its appearance to the accompaniment of a band of music and singing, men and women. First came the ladies of the town, who always walk in these processions, and as many as possible were admitted within the convent gates; the rest stood without in the enclosure. Then came the servants and working girls who are under the patronage of the Ladies of the Retraite. They wore white gowns and veils and blue ribbons above the waist. Following, with the altar boys, in their red gowns this time, and the little communicants whom I have just described. Then, under a gorgeous red canopy came the bishop and his chaplains followed by many priests. He left the canopy at the chapel gates, and went forward and knelt before the altar whilst the assembled crowd beat its knees. It was a most impressive sight, the bishop and his chaplains in their splendid garments against the grey and green of the old castle, the kneeling yellow robed priests on the wide sweeping stairs, the white clad girls in the court below. Then [illegible] in choir—the nuns began to sing, the bishop rose, [illegible] ed, and in a few minutes the ceremony, all too short, was over.

The most interesting room in this old building is the great salon in the centre. It is chaste and serene now, there are no rugs on the dark floor and a life size picture of the Pope with uplifted hands holds eternal court. But once, when England was trembling at the threatened onslaught of France, Napoleon held many a ball in this salon and the brilliant and beautiful women of the Haute-Ville sped over the polished floor in the embrace of the brave French soldiers. I often feel tempted at midnight to steal down the spiral staircase from my room, tiptoe fearfully down the long corridor and peer into the great silent salon with its calm virgin and commanding emblem of the Infallible. Perhaps a ghostly throng would flit in mirthful echo beneath the arches, and vague, vibrating strains of music imprisoned eternally in the waves of air would wander back and inspire those dim, tripping feet. Perchance I might see, stalking through his guests, with head bent, or pausing to pay some rouged and round faced dame a curt and doubtful compliment, the pale image of the greatest man that ever lived. I verily believe I would try it if I were not the greatest coward on earth.

This convent experience recalls another to mind. When I was a very young girl I was staying at a summer resort at the base of the California foot hills. Every day a party of us went for a long walk, and I, being full of that early bravado which defies snakes and cows, was invariably sent ahead to do battle and give warning. One morning we had taken a new direction and I was further in advance than usual, when I was arrested by the clear full notes of a church bell. I stopped in surprise. There was not a village or church within twenty miles, one seldom passed a wood man's hut. Yet there was the bell, vibrating and distinct and it seemed to come from the other side of the hill at a white foot I stood. I ran up the side and paused in astonishment at the top. Below lay a hollow framed by four hills which all spine of lea were covered with carefully trained grape vines of several years' growth. In the hollow were two houses, one surmounted by a cross and about a dozen tents, but not a human being was to be seen. While I was standing hence with feminine curiosity, I was joined by the others and there was a unanimous vote to go below and investigate at once. Nothing loathe, I led the van and we went down and entered the enclosure. Still not a soul was to be seen, not even a dog welcomed the intruders. Could it be a gypsy encampment.

On tiptoe we walked forward and were just about to draw aside the door of a tent when there was a sudden trampling of feet, the surprised cry of a woman. A woman, and the foot of the leading borneth the cross was flung open and some dozen people rushed out waving their arms as I fancied frantically to the gate. Needless to say we immediately took to our heels. We did not know what we had done, but then we were and wanted needed no very urgent [illegible] When panting and crushed we stood on the others side of the gate. Like [illegible] that have been driven from their own [illegible] out of the front yard, all the priests who had been and faced the cross. But they evidently held some consultation among themselves for soon one of the number looked up [illegible] and said with an air [illegible] little him.

You might pardon our apparent rudeness in few but the fact is we are not treat at present, and to look upon a woman at such times is a deadly sin. Otherwise, we assure you that you would meet with every courtesy and if you will return a month from now we will treat you to the best we have, and our wine is very good indeed. Good day, ladies" and he trotted off piece fed by the others.

HELEN DAUVRAY'S CAREER

[Copyrighted 1889, by The Press Syndicate.]

PARIS, August 1, 1889.

There are many Americans who may regret not having paid a visit to the World's Fair in Paris during the exhibition season, notwithstanding the crush and many discomforts to which one necessarily must submit. My present visit recalls the struggles and ambitions of my early career in this city.

The public at home and abroad are impressed with the fact that I am a Californian. On the contrary, I was born in Cincinnati, my maiden name having been Helen Gilson. All but ten years of my life has been on the stage. I made my debut when I was five years of age, in San Francisco, and the first person who gave me a hint as to the art of acting was Mathilda Heron, the original American Camille.

At that time I was known as "Little Nell," and was then a member of Maguire's stock company, among which were Agnes Booth, Frank Mayo, Louis Aldrich and Ben Cotton. The next star who came to us after Mathilda Heron was Edwin Forrest, with whom I played the Duke of York in Richard the III., and for which I received a salary of thirty five dollars a week.

When I was nine years of age my talents were considered of sufficient importance to warrant a starring tour as a child actress. I left the west and went east, where I starred throughout the United States with a company of my own in plays written for me, and with which I was able to lay up a lot of money.

Starring in those days was very different from what it is now. It was then a system of stock companies, and every manager in any city had a regular company; all responsibility and financial risk rested upon the manager's shoulders. As a rule a new star came every week. The manager first deducted from the gross receipts an agreed upon sum for his expenses, and then divided the profits, if any, at the prearranged percentage. If business was bad, the star could only lose her own expenses and work. It required comparatively speaking, no capital at all to begin a starring tour at that time. Things now are in direct contrast. The star travels to-day with an entire company, scenery, and properties, expensive and personal printing must be furnished, and very often large sums of money advanced to members of the company. In fact, all responsibility and financial risk has been shifted from the resident theatre manager to the star or to her and his individual manager. From an artistic point of view the present system is decidedly the best and a star is better enabled to give a smooth, well rehearsed and well mounted performance.

To return to myself, I was fortunate enough to be successful. In 1878 I went to Australia and toured through that country for a year doing an enormous business. In fact, at the end of the engagement I found that I had fortune enough to enable me to gratify my desire to retire for a few years and come to Europe to study. I did so accompanied by my mother, step father, brother and sister, the two latter coming to study their various pursuits. I had always a thirst for knowledge and it was the happiest day of my life when I landed in Paris. The experience seemed like the most delightful recreation I had ever known. I dread of the study and work which I was about to begin. Paris, to me, did not mean only a beautiful city of a new republic with scarcely five years growth, but it was the gratification of all my childish ambitions. It was my first drink of art in its most refined stage and it seemed as if my thirst could never be quenched.

Early and late it was study, study, study. After a certain period of hard work I was impressed with the idea that I had a fine soprano voice and at once my thoughts turned to opera, whereupon I placed myself under the tuition of the Francois Wartel, the teacher of Nilsson, Patti, Marie Rose, Albani and Emma Abbott. I made rapid progress and finally went to Milan to study under Lamperti. After a year and a half of hard work, I was obliged to abandon my operatic aspirations for I found that my voice had been strained by overwork. I was obliged to abandon my operatic aspirations for I found that my voice had been strained by overwork as a child actress, and that I could not stand the strain of more than two acts of an opera.

However [illegible] the [illegible] only [illegible] Bernhardt [illegible] was [illegible] to make a [illegible] in Paris in the natural way. Age. I was a new venture for an American to appear in French comedy without the aid of money or influence. I [illegible] but my French friend which I inherited on my mother's side came to my rescue and with it I had some French pluck enough not to disappoint the Frenchmen.

Dressing alone I obtained an interview with Ludovic Halevy, the author of Frou Frou. He was kind and courteous but he was quite discouraging and said: "My dear child give up such a wild idea. The French public only wish to see such work as each clever actor on the French stage, we never can say that there is a dearth of clever women. Make up your mind to go home, for you will never appear in Paris."

Six months from that day following my own resolutions I appeared in September 1885 at the Folies Dramatiques in a little comedy written by Paul Ferrier. When the curtain fell, and cries for the author were made, I felt that I had not labored in vain, and I shall never forget that night as it was the climax of years of energy and enthusiastic study.

After a time I succumbed to nervous prostration and "rest" was prescribed by the doctors, but to me it meant the demolishing of my "castle", and I took no heed of the advice. In all the Paris press I did not receive one word of adverse criticism and so I continued playing for three consecutive months in Paris of course in the French language, after which the state of my health became so alarming that I gave up and returned to America.

I could not resume my old name of "Little Nell" so I adopted my mother's family name of Dauvray. After a few months of perfect quiet I appeared at the Star theatre, New York, at which time Bronson Howard saw me and consented to write for a "star" for the first time. He wrote "One of Our Girls" which was produced at the Lyceum theatre, New York, in October 1886. My manager died during the first weeks of its success and I found myself suddenly with a New York theatre and the reins of management in my hands. However, I kept control of the theatre for that and the following year and reopened again the second season of "One of Our Girls."

Another play of Bronson Howard's we produced, but it was a failure and was withdrawn after two weeks. Following this I produced the legitimate comedies, Peg Woffington, Scrap of Paper, and the old blank verse comedy of The Love Chase which is said to have given Dion Boucicault his inspiration for his famous London Assurance. The Scrap of Paper, or, as it is known in Paris, Les Pattes de Mouche, by Victorien Sardou, was my greatest financial success.

In my career I have had great opportunities to see the different schools of acting and I confess my choice to be the French school. To a student it is a pleasure to watch a French performance. There is a polish, a Latin finish to all that is done, to me they always seem to "round the corners," and there is no sharp points, there is a raison d'être for everything. I do not wish it inferred by this that I do not see much to admire in the English school, for where will one find better artists than Ellen Terry and Mrs. Kendall?

I reproach my own country people for a lack of seriousness which must be corrected before we can stand side by side with France. Dramatic art is a sublime one, and every exponent should reverence it. Many of our artists use illegitimate methods and will sacrifice artistic consistency to gain laughter or applause. Such methods are bound to reap bad results. Acting should be as natural as if it were a "mirror held up to nature."

I do not believe in schools of acting. During my control of the Lyceum theatre, I had numberless visits from young ladies who wanted to know how they could "learn to act." To one and all I answered: "Well go and act." "What teacher or school would you advise?" they asked. I invariably replied: "There is only one teacher, and that is the stage." I do not mean to say that one cannot learn the rudiments of the stage as one must learn the scales of music, but one can no more teach the impulse the natural instinct of acting, than one can teach the touch of a Rubenstein, the expression of a Schumann. Those girls are born with it. They only need the polish of cultivation and practice.

Strange to say, the most difficult thing to do on the stage is to keep still. You can always detect a novice in their restlessness. Ease and repose are the most difficult effects to obtain in acting.

I have often been asked whom I considered the greatest actress of to-day. I must qualify my answer. I do not consider that a general question. To [illegible] this [illegible] of [illegible] and genius. To illustrate I will say that I consider Fanny Davenport an actress, Jane Hading an artist and Sarah Bernhardt a genius.

Apropos, what a different impression the last two women made upon me. It is impossible to watch Jane Hading and not be influenced by her beauty. Her glorious eyes console for many a visible lack of genius while in witnessing Sarah Bernhardt's performances I do not see the woman I only feel the role that she portrays. As many times as I have seen Bernhardt on the stage I could not now tell whether her eyes are blue or black, but I think that I could almost draw Hading's face. Is this a tribute to Bernhardt or a reproach to Hading? Let my readers decide.

HELEN DAUVRAY WARD.

LADY COLIN CAMPBELL.

The Duke of Argyll's Famous Daughter-in-Law at Home.

Chats About Her Literary Work and Other Subjects.

Her Opinions on Women's Suffrage and Women's Dress.

LONDON, July 29, 1889.

As I entered Lady Colin's study parlor, I was effusively welcomed by two dogs, a collie and a Scotch terrier. The collie was especially hospitable. After giving me many hints that he would like a friendly pat on the head, and having received the caresses he settled down at my feet and stretched himself out for a nap. This gave me an opportunity while waiting for his mistress to look about me a bit.

The room was a very large one in fact two good sized rooms thrown into one by an archway. The decorations and furniture were in no particular style. It gave the impression of belonging to a decade ago, and having been brought, by clever artistic touches into line with the ideas of today. The walls covered with Japanese paper of raised gold, were hung with choice paintings and etchings, the tables and etageres were covered with dainty bits of china, Venetian glass photographs, and flowers, indeed, wherever a cozen of vantage was to be found, a rare piece of embroidery or something in the way of bric-a-brac displayed itself. The profusion of bibelots and flowers ran riot over on the sideway "Grand," and on the large Louis Quinze bureau, with its convenient sliding slabs for holding notes and manuscripts. On either side of the wide, tiled fireplace was a broad, generous lounge, piled high with eider down cushions of every shape, size, color and design. Over the end of one couch was thrown a tiger skin, the head of the animal resting on the floor and forming a comfortable footstool, the other couch was covered by an immense black bear skin. The low spacious seats and quantities of embroideries suggest divans and the far east, and the impression is heightened by the two luxurient palms, standing in huge urns of wrought ironwork at either side of the room, with their graceful branches reaching to the ceiling and arching over head in the centre. At one side of the fireplace, in handy proximity to the divans, stood a low table of pierced Cashmere copper work, freely littered with the daily papers, English, French and Italian, while an equal number of magazines and periodicals were lodged in a rack below.

It was a charming picture altogether as Lady Colin came down the vista toward me. As I rose to meet her it was difficult to suppress the exclamation "Ah! Diana of the Crossways!" Lady Colin is a very tall, slender, regal woman. Her height must be at least five feet nine but so exactly proportioned is the whole form that there is no effect of over topping us smaller mortals. Her complexion is a clear, pale olive, with high color only in the lips, and she carries her head royally with its crown of jet black hair. The features are regular, the eye brows delicately pencilled. She was dressed in a severely plain green cloth costume trimmed with dark fur. The perfect lines of her form were not obscured by a single fold. The tall palm bending gracefully, inclining to this side or that typified her. At the time of the trial a friend told me that she had once met at dinner Lady Colin just after her marriage. My friend asked who the beauty was and on being told she remarked that fate would no doubt give the royal looking lady a history. In fact it is easy to see that Lady Colin was inevitably destined to play a role like George Meredith's heroine.

So strikingly southern is Lady Colin's appearance that I asked her if she was not of Spanish origin.

"No, I am a daughter of Erin," she replied, "my family have been in Ireland since the days of good Queen Bess and we still hold the estates that she granted to us there."

"Then you are a landlord; and no doubt opposed to home rule?" I suggested.

"Yes, I know how unfitted the Irish are for self government. They are like children, they need to be led. Even the good points and they have many, of their character make them incapable of steady, calm, self control. Misgoverned they no doubt have been, wrongs there are to be righted, a measure of local government they, in common with the rest of the United Kingdom, need, but political autonomy for them is sheer madness, and from the point of view of England a position as a great power and as a nation, a geographical impossibility. If Ireland were as far removed from England as Iceland is she might have home rule, self government, and all the independence she pleased, but as long as England and Ireland occupy their present positions on the map of the world, they must remain under one control. The Irish are full of pluck and spirit, they make the very best soldiers, but they need strong and watchful discipline and able leaders. And as it is in every line they are brilliant, they have often undoubted genius, but they lack poise. I must for Ireland's sake that home rule will never come."

"Are you interested in politics?" I asked.

"Yes I follow all the burning questions of the day, both here and abroad. My work as a journalist requires my being more or less conversant with what is going on in the political as well as in the art and literary worlds."

"And when did you first begin journalistic work?" I inquired.

"In 1886 for the Saturday Review and I have been a constant contributor to that paper ever since. I am one of the regular book reviewers and then she added with a merry peal of laughter "you know of that terrible brotherhood." It was not difficult to imagine her writing some of the scathing criticisms that strike terror into many an aspiring maker of books. She has no doubt helped the powerful English review to earn its name of Saturday Reviler.

"Have you done other than critical work for the same paper?"

"Yes I wrote a series of articles some years ago on the subject of Cheap Food for the Million. These papers I have since collected and published in a little volume under the title of 'The Book of the Running Brook.' It is an unending source of amusement to my friends when I own to having written on fish, for such is the subject dealt with. I told about the haunt and habits of freshwater fish, and aimed at bringing before the English people the fact of the existence of this excellent form of cheap food, which is so much prized on the continent, and so unjustly and unduly despised in this country."

"And where did you gather your information about the natural history of fish?" I queried.

"Largely from practical experience. I have always been devoted to every form of outdoor sport, amongst which fishing naturally has a place. You see I am a firm believer in mens sana in corpore sano, and that you should train and exercise your body as well as your mind. Hunting, fishing, shooting, swimming, rowing, have all been my delight from my earliest childhood, and gymnastics, and especially fencing, hold a large place in my affections."

Even a casual observer would note that the fair Artemis gives evidence of all this physical activity. She has the appearance of a woman sound through and through, brimming over with health, every muscle firm and flexible. Her step is elastic, her eyes clear and sparkling. Here's a woman you think, with good spirits, no "nerves," and an unimpeachable digestion. Would that the world had more such.

"And how," I asked, with some curiosity, "do you get suitable recreation in London?"

"Fresh air I must have every day. How people can do without it I cannot understand. But a walk hither or thither through the busy streets as I go to make some call, or attend to some matter of business, in the afternoon hours, has to suffice. Then I have my fencing bout, though of course that is exercise, but not fresh air. I tried to ride every day at one time, but I found that it meant spending half the day in my maid's hands, dressing and undressing. So I gave it up. Bicycles, to walk over long paved streets only to find the park, when you get there, thronged with people, which necessitates keeping at most to a gentle amble, is a game that is really not worth the candle."

"I concluded you were fond of outdoor life and animals when I was welcomed by the dogs."

"Oh yes they are only a part of my menagerie. I have here in my flat about twenty-five birds as well as a couple of Persian cats. I used even at one time to keep a snake but it met with such opposition amongst my friends that at last I sent it to the 'Zoo' where it is kept for me. I love all animals and as regards dogs I am quite of Madam Roland's opinion, 'Plus on connait les hommes, plus on aime les chiens.' And here is what comes next to my dogs in my affections" and Lady Colin turned to a cage that stood at the base of one of the big palms and began cooing sweet nothings in French to "Polly." He had been trained at the famous establishment for piping bullfinches at Hartz, in Germany, and as soon as he heard his pet name began his exquisite soft notes.

From the birds Lady Colin turned to her bookcase and took down the "Book of the Running Brook" to show me. I remarked on the appropriateness of the binding, cool white linen and silver lettering.

"Yes, it is pretty, though you would hardly think it is made of the same material as the white duck trousers of the officers in the royal navy. It has the merit of being pleasant to both the eye and the touch, and what an element in the enjoyment of a book is the feeling of its binding! For summer literature I do not know anything better as a binding than this white duck and then, in my eyes, at least, it has the merit of reminding me of what I love best in all nature, the ocean. No wonder I spend my summer vacation here than I am off to the sea. I cannot bear mountains. I feel 'cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd,' when I am surrounded by them; and of all countries on the face of the globe, I think Switzerland the most detestable, though it is little short of heresy to say so. A mountain is so stolid, blank and unsuggestive. One feels as if one were in prison. But the sea' with its far off horizons, its ever changing color, its strength, its individuality, its caprices and the glorious music of its voice, draws your thoughts on to infinite imaginings. To me it is the most marvellously feminine thing in nature. The prairies in America must have something of the same effect. I should like to see them."

The little book whose cover had sent us off on so long a voyage to the continent and to the new world, I still held in my hand. It suggested the question if my hostess had ever published anything else.

"When I was only sixteen" said Lady Colin, "I wrote a child's story called 'Topo,' which was illustrated by Kate Greenaway. And now I am busy on a novel I had over and over again declared I would never write one, but this time the offer from my publisher was not one to be refused. It will out about the end of July."

I anxiously inquired if it were to be in the three volume form usual in England.

"No no one wants it. As a reviewer I have suffered to scarcely from romances which would have been better for condensation, to perpetrate three volumes. It is the circulating libraries that have placed that yoke on modern literature. But perhaps added Lady Colin with a smile, the true cause is our prolific family in England. You see it is convenient for three daughters can read the book at the same time. It precludes contention, and Lady Colin told off the arrangement of daughters and volumes on her fingers.

"Well since you condemn the three volume novel will you tell me what department of literature you do like?"

"Oh, I do not condemn the subtrefuge of the three volumes but I think a good story is often spoiled by spinning it out to so great a length. I like romances well enough. Howells, Hawthorne, and some of the early works of Henry James, such as 'Daisy Miller' and the 'Madonna of the Future,' are great favorites of mine. You have another author, John Fovcerty, who wrote 'After His Kind,' whose writing I admire immensely. All these have that greatest gift of the real artist, simplicity. Well, now after using the word simplicity, I shall seem guilty of a paradox in saying that I rate our English author George Meredith, almost higher than anyone else. I think his book, 'Richard Feverel,' is one of the very finest novels in the language, if not actually the very best. The versatility of imagination of the man who could write the progress of Adrian with the wedding cake, in 'Richard Feverel,' the analysis of Sir Willoughby, in the 'Egoist,' and the scene of the death of Bhaptavar and the scenes, in the 'Shaving of Shagpat,' is something beyond the power of words to praise."

"And among women novelists, who are your favorites, Lady Colin?"

"I fear I am somewhat heretical. George Eliot I cannot say I esteem as other people do. Of course 'The Mill on the Floss' and 'Adam Bede' are colossal, but putting those two works aside, I think she is greatly overrated. She has, especially in her later works, neither simplicity nor humor. What would now be thought of any one who [illegible] being George Eliot wrote such a phrase as 'the dynamic quality of her glance.' Was there ever such a prig as Daniel Deronda, such a wooden exaggeration as Grandcourt, such wooden lacquer as Gwendolen? Compare George Eliot's capacity for drawing actual living types with that of Mrs. Gaskell, in 'Cranford' for instance, and the delightful sense of humor, as well as pathos, which plays so charmingly around all the portraits drawn by the latter's pen."

Thinking it might interest my readers I asked this rather startlingly original critic what were her favorite books in literature.

"Ah that's hard to say. One reads so much, indeed, one has to read so perpetually, new books in order to keep in touch with the public and consequently has so little time to give to old favorites, that it is difficult to recall just which are the treasures."

Lady Colin had at my suggestion of her being set down in the Desert of Sahara and having the choice of but one book in the world and added:

"Then I should, I think, cling to the 'Life Thoughts of Marcus Aurelius.' To read that book there is always time, it is my constant companion and I do not think I could ever do without it."

In answer to my question as to the way she filled her day, Lady Colin said she breakfasted soon after nine and got to work before ten. From that hour till half-past one she is at her desk. As a rule, her actual literary work ends for the day at half-past one unless she has some pressure of writings to get through, when she works again in the afternoon or evening. She composes a great deal on the type writer, using a "Hammond" machine, and finds it especially convenient (as printers' errors are avoided) in writing for the F. [illegible] Lady Colin is art and literary critic for several continental as well as English papers, and writes and speaks several languages as fluently as her mother tongue. As soon as her writing is over she goes to lunch with her father and mother, whom she makes it a rule always to visit once, if not twice, every day. The afternoons she devotes to social or business visits, or to her work amongst the poor. In addition to her work in the East End and the south of London Lady Colin said: "I find that what the poor most need and appreciate is personal contact. Big impersonal charities are all very well, but they do not carry the same result, as 'one cup of cold water' given from hand to hand. The poor like to feel that we take an individual interest in them, that we will put ourselves out to go down and make acquaintance with them in their poor little homes, and in fact give them human affection and do what we can to lighten the darkness of their lives."

"Then no doubt you believe in entertainments for the people," I ventured.

"I am a disciple of the gospel of gladness and joy," replied Lady Colin earnestly, "one needs to go much among the poor to see how terribly dull life must be to them. Imagine what it must be to live the lives of the poor of such a city as London. Nothing gladdens their hearts more than music, and I certainly do advocate giving concerts with the poor as audience, not with the rich as hearers. I do more than advocate, for I sing constantly in all the poorest parts of London, and I always find my listeners grateful, appreciative and even enthusiastic."

"And from your experience [illegible] the poor have you drawn any conclusion?"

"None, the problem is very difficult to solve, the main difficulty is, of course, over population. There are people are trying to travel where there is room for one."

"And are you interested in other reformatory questions?"

"I am most deeply interested in every effort towards the advancement of women."

"Do woman suffrage too?" I asked.

"Yes indeed, I think our enfranchisement one of the most important questions of the day. Wage earning women especially are sadly in need of being placed on a political equality with men. A voice in the affairs of the nation in which we have just as capital an interest as men, will give us all a better status and arm us for life's struggle."

"Well, Lady Colin, I have been pursuing you everywhere with questions, but there is one last thing that has literally on the surface. What is your attitude on the much vexed matter of woman's dress?"

"My maxim thereon is very short," came the quick response, "It is every woman's first duty to look her best. It is a capital sin against her womanhood for a woman to be careless or neglectful of her looks and general appearance. That to my mind is the whole of the law, the Alpha and Omega."

"And do you apply the same rule to men?"

"Oh dear, no. Men are, in most things, in dress and in much else besides, past praying for. The binding duty to look one's best is only possible in the prominent sphere of my sex."

And as I left Lady Colin Campbell I thought how well she carried out her dictum.

Special Correspondence of the Gazette News.

Captain D. C. Terry, who has just resigned the position of executive clerk to the governor to become a pension examiner, has an almost exhaustless fund of anecdote or amusing stories, incidents or information at his command. Most of his stock he has gathered in his own varied experiences and observations. Let him lean back in a comfortable arm chair and get his thoughts turned toward reminiscences and he is sure to interest his auditors. He was born and grew to manhood in Tennessee, when the institution of slavery was in its prime. He grew up to believe it wrong, his mother instilling the belief into his mind from infancy.

"But I saw enough of slavery myself to set me against it," said the captain a few days ago, in speaking of this period of his career. "In several instances I saw slave children sold when reins contained so much of their master's blood that their skins were without a tinge of the African color except in the instance of a stripe down the spinal column. Such things as that were so plainly and horribly wrong that I need no teaching in order to know it. Between selling human beings who were partly white and those entirely black I saw no way wouldn't find any line where the wrong ended and the right began.

"What do I mean by the stripe down the spinal column? Why I mean, if you knew the presence of African blood in any person, no matter how slight the proportion, can be instantly detected by a dark line in the back. Even an octoroon, with no appearance and features purely Caucasian, invariably has this line of dark. It is a never failing proof of mixed blood. The mark is not always black, but is always considerably darker than the rest of the surface of the body.

"Of course you didn't know that perhaps, you don't know that a negro child at its birth is as light colored as a white one. You wouldn't notice any difference in the color at all. In three or four hours after birth the skin begins to turn dark and in a short time becomes as black as the child is destined to be during its life."

A [illegible]

"The natives of Africa are cowards in war," said Carl Stechlman, the explorer, who started to-day for New York, preparatory to going to the Congo [illegible]. "They prefer to take prisoners, and comparatively few of their enemies are killed outright. They are afraid to strike for fear they will receive a disabling blow in return. They make slaves of their prisoners, who have a very hard time.

"Of all [illegible] they dread the gorilla. And he is a foe that no man dare despise. He will fight at sight. Numbers do not deter him. He is so powerful and so [illegible] in his rage and attack that the Africans have long learned that to fight with a gorilla is to fight to the death. This dreadful animal keeps to the woods, as it is necessary for him to grasp hold of the boughs as he walks on his hind legs. A man is, therefore, comparatively safe if he is on the prairie.

"There are some extraordinary things told of the gorilla. I will relate one of them. I had always heard it said that the male gorilla would not have a woman. This is the common belief in Africa. One day we came to a village in which one hut had been built apart from the rest. We inquired for the chief of this and found that it had been dedicated to a witch. This woman was greatly revered. The woman had lived in the village in a house which stood on the edge of the forest. A great tree overhung her dwelling. In the village all the trees had been cut down as a protection against the gorillas. One night one of these animals came out of the forest, got up into the big tree which overhung the woman's house, climbed down on the roof, threw the roof off, swung down into the hut, seized the woman, climbed up through the hole in the roof up into the tree and went away into the woods, carrying the woman with him. His great strength made this an easy thing for him to do. He could hold her in one arm, and with his two hind legs and his one free foot can make his way up and down trees or through the woods. The woman was gone for many days. The people saw that her [illegible] roof had been torn off. They looked carefully around the house and saw that there were no tracks whatever. Then they knew that the dreadful gorilla had carried her off.

"One day she came back. She told a wonderful story. The gorilla had carried her for miles into the woods and finally had climbed a great tree and deposited her in his home. There he treated her very kindly, brought her food and drink, but would not permit her to leave. After watching her carefully for many days, he finally left her, probably intending to return in a short time, convinced that she would remain. The woman came down to the ground and after wandering in the forest for several days made her way back to the village. The people at first were about to kill her, but they finally concluded that she was possessed of extraordinary powers. They therefore took her a bride to the chief, supplied her with every [illegible] and set up to her as a [illegible]."

Danton had rightly complained of being put on trial with such blackguards, [illegible] to Chabot and Junius Frey, an Austrian banker, charged with defrauding the government. Men of different nationalities, politics and alleged crimes were dragged to death with him, many a match-maker, as was considered during the Terror. The guillotine was so taxed with laughter that there was no knowing to discern news. Not half the prisoners were killed in sight of Danton, but among those the most conspicuous was Camille Desmoulins, who, as we have seen, was the first to incite attack on the Bastile.

A lawyer, he never practiced, having a bias in favor of literature. [illegible] of genius, he would in another era have gained fame as poet or novelist. But, an idealist, full of aspirations for [illegible] he became a politician in 1789. [illegible] enough for the "People" and "Free France," which brought him to the front. His newspaper, The Revolutions of France and Brabant, [illegible] by its vigor and beauty of style contrasted with the [illegible] wit. Danton was his bosom friend, he admired [illegible], they were politically connected from the formation of the Cordeliers club and naturally died together. When he was [illegible] of justice [illegible] was [illegible] necessary, and they were both [illegible] to the [illegible] convention. He readily [illegible] the Girondists, been by his "History of the Brabant," but [illegible] with their fall, and tried hard, though in vain, to save them. He and his friends labored, in May, 1794, to lead [illegible] the convention to adopt milder measures, and he also [illegible] in his journal, Le Vieux Cordelier.

Having [illegible] the duty of pacificator, he favored [illegible] being [illegible] to [illegible] the crowd of [illegible] which [illegible] him to be [illegible] by the Jacobins. [illegible] who need not be [illegible] but [illegible] that he should be [illegible]. "To turn is not to [illegible]," declared the [illegible] and thus in [illegible] the [illegible] of his age, at the trial, he said: "Thirty thousand [illegible] the age of the [illegible] the fatal age for [illegible]." He was [illegible] and, as usual, without a [illegible].

On his way to the guillotine he struggled with [illegible] and recalls his [illegible] to the [illegible] "Show the head of the first [illegible] of the Revolution! Do you kill your [illegible]?" They usually jibed at him. They would have done the [illegible] he been [illegible]. The Parisian mob in the days were [illegible] devils. He [illegible] and died bravely, holding in his [illegible] a lock of hair of his cheating wife Lucile.

They [illegible] that real [illegible] love [illegible] even in France [illegible] Danton's effort to save him, with a [illegible] letter to Robespierre, who had [illegible] and had been his fellow [illegible]. They [illegible] no reply. As a last [illegible] to stop a riot in his [illegible] and is executed a few days later.

HEIGHT OF THE TERROR.

The [illegible] and [illegible] of the Terror, which [illegible] with Robespierre's own [illegible]. From the beginning of [illegible] to the [illegible] of July, 1794, the guillotine was [illegible] and the awful [illegible] wholly on Robespierre. [illegible] in imaginary [illegible], and that it could only be [illegible] by increasing the number of victims. A new trial was [illegible], and any sort of [illegible] was enough [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible].

St. Just and Couthon now formed with Robespierre a new triumvirate. The old [illegible] of Marat, Danton and Robespierre [illegible] to all his [illegible]. It had even [illegible] to the [illegible] of the right to [illegible] without [illegible] had [illegible] what he [illegible] the worship of the Supreme Being, taking it by an [illegible] fanatical [illegible] had for his [illegible]. The [illegible] of their [illegible] to efface the idea of the deity, as if they should [illegible] but to [illegible]. This is an [illegible] of men who claim to be particularly [illegible], they think to prove their faith in and love of God by patronizing him superlatively, and [illegible] what they have done in his behalf. Louis XIV is supposed to have complained upon the most flattering defeat of his life at Ramillies, of the ingratitude of the Almighty, after the many favors he had received from the [illegible] King.

At this time large [illegible] were thronged with victims of the fury of the republic. As many as sixty, seventy, even eighty prisoners were beheaded daily in Paris, and often persons of most different politics—Royalists, [illegible], republicans, extremists, socialists, were [illegible] of in batches together. There was such a rage for [illegible] and [illegible] that, in various [illegible] jails a market with chalk the doors of the cells of [illegible] to do in the [illegible]. The doors were marked when they were [illegible] on the inside, and being shut at night the marks would not be visible, and thus other victims would be taken to the scaffold in order to complete the regular number.

Legal murder and grown to be a mere matter of routine, deprived of the essential religious of the guillotine of the [illegible]. Pen drawings [illegible] illustrate the savagery of the [illegible]. The men and women who fed the [illegible] maw of the Revolution, in all ways throughout France have never been [illegible], and never can be. Apart from the [illegible], many were killed in civil war, with shot and drowned by [illegible] in the [illegible] of [illegible] that [illegible] would not [illegible]. [illegible] must have perished on the scaffold, and many of the [illegible] were so [illegible] as to make the number appear much larger.

It will be tedious to the reader that the execution [illegible] of both sexes would follow the cart carrying the condemned to the scaffold. [illegible] at defiance and [illegible] with all the [illegible] and [illegible] of an French populace. The [illegible] of the victim, the female [illegible] Queen Marie Antoinette [illegible] to be driven through the [illegible] that [illegible] her denunciation. DOWN WITH THE TYRANT

Danton's words to Robespierre "I drag him after me," were winged with prophecy. From the moment that Danton fell even those nearest to the dictator felt that they might follow him at any hour. Their feelings were entirely vindicated. Week after week, the guillotine was fed to the bloody [illegible] required of it. Would there be any end of the slaughter? Would it not go on until France had been drained of her sons? [illegible]

CONSPIRACY WOUNDED

[illegible] though he had been one of [illegible] received that Robespierre [illegible] on his shoulders. The cause was [illegible] was needed, that in his [illegible] to Bordeaux in the autumn of 1793, for the purpose of [illegible] all those of the Girondists, he had, after [illegible] city, gone suddenly home. LEFT AT GREAT YARMOUTH

[illegible]

New York, Aug. 15.—At Great Yarmouth, England, Hercules, [illegible] tap room, opposite Lodge's. The Hercules Saturday [illegible] Twenty feet from my window. Empty by day. Full every night. Herring fishermen. Wives ditto. Partners [illegible] life in drinking. Hercules [illegible] quite. One mug for two, man and wife. Sip alternately. Feminine power to drink pot equal to man's. He sips. She sips. She sips. He sips. Mug empty. Passed to barmaid. B. M. at beer pump. Practised muscle. Mind ditto. One stroke pump lever for half a pint. Two, a pint. Quarter stroke thrown in for good measure. Alternate conjugal sipping as before. Sanded floor. Long table. Rack of long-stemmed clay pipes. Public pipes. For customers. Smoke room full. All [illegible] talk. Talk, noisy, exciting and at [illegible] o'clock confused.

Commences to simmer down at midnight. Company at that hour at maximum of heaviness and pensiveness. Long wrangled. Sum up. High pressure. Inspirational external angle of sage. Same old yarn. Hundredth time. Five hundredth time. Midnight. Hercules puts up shutters. Turns 'em out. Patrons lurch home. Bite to go home. Mild night. Soft moonlight. High tide of tenderness. All nature at rest. Care driven away. Recollection of debts, the interest's labors, the [illegible] and waiting wives softened down. Rosate hue over all. Lifted into temporary elysium by beer. No wonder they linger.

Labored. Within ear shot of it all. Without beer. Don't want beer. Want sleep. Can't get sleep. Can get only tossing fishermen's nightlight beer talk. Time lags. Leaden winged. One o'clock. Still hearing beer talk of men who go down on great deep and now in depths of beer. Two o'clock. A week has passed. Turn and toss. Frame of mind malignant.

Hope at last. Signs of breaking up. Of what? Maritime beer talk. Subject. Best way of picking up anchor after slipping cable. Seven opinions given. All talk together. Different [illegible] of opinion. Talk loud. Energetic. Some profanity. Subject finally forgotten. Mere [illegible] something else. Then focuses into common subject. What?

Gibbons. Gibbons drunkest of [illegible]. Beer needle of Gibbons suddenly lost over. Gibbons becomes volcanic. Eruptive. Gibbons differs from everybody. Becomes profane. Abusive. Wants to fight.

Lesser drunks argue with Gibbons. Coax him to go home. Gibbons won't go home. But loves to be coaxed. Regards coaxing as sort of homage paid him by peers. Common drunken perception in case of the Gibbons type of man. Gibbons real want? A club mercifully administered.

Gibbons finally prevailed on to start for home. Home at upper end of court two hundred yards distant from tap windows. Gibbons stops. Anchors to lamp post. Wants to go back for the last drink. Forgot it.

Gibbons' friends argue with Gibbons. "No more tonight, Gibbons. Go home to your wife, man!" Party deeply solicitous for Gibbons' moral welfare. His wife's name. Such a comfort if the drunken crazy Gibbons will but go home to his wife! Interest on their back that when Gibbons comes, he [illegible] Gibbons will come over with the [illegible] that time.
